Infertility is a major life crisis. The stress of it has a rippling effect on all areas of life. Suddenly your well-planned and successful life seems out-of-control. Not only is your body not responding as expected but it feels as if your entire life is on hold. Facing the repeated disappointment of not becoming pregnant can lead to depression for both spouses, cause a marked increase in stress and anxiety, and be destructive to your marriage.

Infertility , affects your personal balance, ability to plan, financial stability, work productivity, family and personal relationships, sense of spirituality, hope for the future, experience of spontaneous and low stress pregnancy. There is also a loss of privacy as a couple seeks invasive treatments and shares private information with others. This sense of loss and a lack of control over the situation affects your self-esteem and self-image. You will move through this crisis, but this journey is not easy. Stay informed about the options that may facilitate your way toward becoming a parent and help reduce strain on your mind, body and marriage.

Infertility affects many couples (i.e., 7.3 million people in the U.S., 12% of women of childbearing age, or 1 in 8 couples, according to 2002 National Survey of Family Growth), but it is commonly experienced as a highly private matter, not shared with many others. It leads to additional sense of loneliness and disconnect. You don't have to go through this difficult time alone. Even though at times you feel defeated and powerless, there are many psychological coping strategies and holistic treatment procedures that can be accessed at GreenPath Clinic that may help you become pregnant, sustain pregnancy and deliver a healthy baby.

GreenPath Clinic offers a full range of professional services to help you deal with stress of infertility, support your unique way of pursuing your dreams of parenthood by natural conception, use of assisted reproductive procedures, or adoptive parenting.
